Lexington-Marshall Publishing. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 231 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 5.5in. x 0.6in.Set in Montana in the early 60s, it is the story of one man who against impossible odds refused to give in to despair and hopelessness. Amos was a man who thought hed experienced all that life had to offer when, with a capricious turn of fate, he fell through the cracks of societys institutions, into the merciless cogwheels of human apathy and carelessness. After a tragic accident that kills his wife and leaves him with a shattered hip, without family, and penniless, Amos is deposited in the county poor farm, Sunset Home, outside a small Montana town. He believes his life is over and he resolves to let go and die as quickly as possible, isolating himself from the other residents of the poor farm. Under head nurse Daisy Dawss iron-clad rule, he notices small cruelties and injustices but attempts to ignore them in his refusal to accept this meaningless end to his life, until an unthinkable horror witnessed by chance in the middle of the night reawakens his deeply felt sense of justice. Ever so often, indifference and neglect mutate into unmitigated evil and then humanity goes on trial. Rarely, someone stands in the breach and shouts No with only courage and dignity as weapons. Amos, in spite of himself, becomes that person when he says aloud to himself in the darkness of his bleak little room, Im not going to die, by God, and Im not going to let her get away with it! The story of his struggle with Daisy Daws not only to survive but to overcome is a compelling testimony to the inner strength and irrepressible spirit of man. Albert Camus once said, In the midst of winter, I found...
