Another missionary writes: This little flock were compelled to build, by the unwillingness of those who own the house (in which they had previously been permitted to worship once a month) to allow us this privilege any longer, so that our people must either build or disband. Their building cost 5, 000, of which they were only able to pay 800. Several members became security for the debt, and mortgaged their farms or homesteads. This burden they are no longer able to bear, having lost their crops for two years in succession. And now one of the elders must sell his farm to prevent the accumulation of interest which neither he nor the rest of the church are able to pay. In justice to myself, I must say, all this happened...
